The number of bitcoins has increased in value immensely since, eventually reaching a record high of $1,100 in late 2017. With such a vast history, the currency and a large amount of speculation surrounding it, it isn't surprising that bitcoin is still a controversial topic in Japan. According to a study by WalletHub, a personal finance website, Japan is the fourth most interested country for bitcoin. The list, based on data from the social networking service in 230 countries, rates bitcoin interest in terms of digital currency users and financial law. Tokyo's top spot is interesting, and to understand why Japan is so interested, it is necessary to look at two other cryptocurrencies, Ethereum and Ripple.
